tract was faithfully performed. Such was McParlan's testimony. Its truthfulness as regards the practices of the Molly Maguires throughout the coal regions was proved by corroborative testimony, and the confessions of the Mollies themselves.

The First Notable Murder. This was in Carbon county, on the 14th of June, 1862. At Audenreid, on that day, Frank W. Langdon, a ticket boss of the Honeybrook Coal Company, was brutally murdered on the public streets, on his way home from a public meeting. His ass assination was observed by some of the citizens of the place, and his cries for help heard by many, but in such terror were the people that no man was brave enough to go to the assistance of the dying mun. The murders were well known, but some time elapsed before the authorities could summon sufficient courage to arrest them. At last the attempt was made and two or three of the men were lodged in jail at Mauch Chunk. At a habeas corpus hearing that was granted them, the Commonwealth's witnesses broke down and the prisoners were released. Fifteen years passed by and Langdon was yet unavenged, but last year during the crusade against the Mollies, the authorities of the county succeed in arresting John Kehoe, Neil Dougherty, John Campbell and others, charged with the murder of the past. Jack Kehoe was convicted of the murder of Langdon and sentenced to be hung on the 16th of April last, by Judge Pershing of Schuylkill county. Dougherty and Campbell were convicted of murder in second degree for complicity with Kehoe, and are now in the Penitentiary, Kehoe who was the sixteenth Mollie sentenced to be hung, has his case now before the Supreme Court, and it will be argued in Pittsburgh at the fall term. He is a leader of the Mollies, and negotiated in 1875 with prominent Republican politicians to throw the vote of the order for Hartranft for Governor and against Judge Pershing. For doing this he got a thou-sand dollars and pardons for some of his

In Schuylkill County.

The murder of Langdon was but one of many that horrified the residents of the coal regions years ago, but at last the "Buckshots" became so unbearably blood thirsty as to frighten some of their own number, who left the State. Schuylkill county became the theatre of crime but here the murderers of the coal region were known as "Molly Maguires," a name that will never be forgotten by the people of the State. The crimes committed by the society in that county are numberless. In 1868 the society aggregated about 200, scattered among three or four divisions, as their lodges were called, but this small body of men terrorized the entire county. Murder after murder was committed and no arrests were made; men suddenly disappeared and were never seen or heard of again; breakers were burned and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, and the upshot of such a state of affairs was that capital refused to invest in a region where neither life nor property was safe from the hand of the assassin and robbery. The knife, pistol the safety of the prison. The police of and torch vied with each other in the borough had been strengthened by nor the year 1872 and 1874 many crimes of a heinous character were committed by the order, but none of the perpetrators were brought to justice. In 1675, what is known as the "long strike," by which the mining of coal in the Schuylkill region was entirely suspended, oc-cured. Riots followed of so destructive a character to life and property that the military were stationed by the Governor at various points in the anthracite region. In July of 1875, the miners concluded to accept the reduction of wages and the troops were withdrawn. This did not suit the views of the "Mollies." While anarchy reigned there was a magnificent opportunity for the commission of crime; but with the return of peace and work murder was attended with some risk. However, risk was something never taken into consideration by these men, as the law was considered by them to be power-less and the "Mollies" invincible.

The Powell Murde...

It was for this crime John Donahue the fourth of the Carbon county murderers was hung at Mauch Chunk. In the sum mer of 1871 Alexander Campbell applied to Morgan Powell, a boss near Mauch Chunk, for work in the mines. He was refused and Campbell became very angry. At a meeting of the Summit Hill Division of the Mollie Maguires, Campbell deman-ded that Powell be killed. It happened that just at this time Thomas P. Fisher had a grudge against John P. Jones, and he amended Campbell's proposition by moving that Jones be killed first. Fisher carried his point. Campbell secured the leadership and determined to have his man dealt with first, and accordingly he sent word to "Yellow Jack" Donahue, at Tuscarora, to select men to do the job. Donahue was nothing loth and under took to superintend it himself. He selected his brother, Matthew Donahue. Charles Mulhearn, Patrick O'Donnell Patrick McKenna and John Malloy to accompany him. The last two came to the rendezvous at Tamaqua too late, and the others started without them. O'Donnell and Mallow were afterwards fined $5 each for absence. It was on the afternoon of the 2nd of December, 1872, that the three murderers started on their errand. While waiting in the street Powell's character was discussed, and Campbell asserted that he would not give an Irishman any show for work. While they were talking Powell came out from the store to return to his home in Lansford (subse quently noted as the scene of the murder of Powell's successor, John P. Jones), and immediately "Yellow Jack" Donahue stepped forward and levelling his pistol at him, fired. The first cap fulled to explode. The assassin cocked the weapon again, and this time shot his victim through the body. Powell exclaiming "My God, I'm shot!" fell, and the assassins escaped into the brush. Mr. Powell lingered until the Monday following, when he died. One hundred dollars was to have been paid for this murder, with the additional understanding that men from Summit Hill should murder a man named Coleraine at Tamaqua. A party from Summit Hill went over to do the "job" but Coleraine had disappeared. Only $39 of the $100 was raised, which was handed to "Yellow Jack" Donahue.

The Hen Executed Thursday. James Carroll is American born, of Irish parents, and was a man who exercired a great deal of influence over his more ignorant companions. He leaves a wife and several children. Boyle was born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, and could neither read nor write, being in the same position as his companion Hugh McGeehan. Alexander Campbell, a man standing six feet one inch in his bare feet, is also a Donegal man, and was married to a handsome woman from the same county. Donahue was also married and came from the same part of Ireland as Doyle who was single, while Kelly, a mere boy, is American born. With the exception of Kelly and Donahue, none of the condemned men have made public confessions.

McParlan, the Detective.

James McParlan, the detective, is an Ulster county Irishman. He was twenty, nine years old in 1873, when he was sent on his mission among the Molly Maguires. After a stay of a few months, in which he made himself familiar with various lo calities in the coal regions, he was ready to begin work. He selected Shenaudoah as his headquarters, and settled there in February, 1874. He assumed the name of James McKenna, and pretended to be in search of work. He was soon popular among the miners as one of their own kind. He could sing a song, dance a jig, fight a pair of dogs, gaff a game of cock as neatly as his neighbor, and court the girls to distraction. His whispered con fidences that he was engaged in "shoving the queer" (passing counterfeit money) and that he was "wanted" in Buffalo gave him a status among criminals. He was a fighting man too and could handle the mittens beautifully. He never refused a friendly glass, be the whisky ever so bad and he spent his money with a free hand. By shrewd stratagem he became a Molly, and succeeded in having himself elected of a reprieve, and he only of the six Secretary of a division. All through the summer and fall of 1874 he was busily at made a speech. At 12:21 the trap fell, work, increasing his influence, gaining information, and making his reports to headquarters.

The danger that McParlan ran in this The danger that McParlan ran in this strangulation. His neck was dislocated, and the succeeding exciting weeks was The bodies of McGeehan, Boyle and Duffy very great. His character as a leading Molly was well known, and the people were thirsting for vengeance. His prose-cution of the search for evidence to justify arrests took him from one place to another, and it may safely be asserted that his life was in constant jeopardy. His labors broke up the organization, and his evidence secured the conviction of the Executions at Pottsville.

Pottsville, June 21.—The weather this morning at daybreak was dull and heavy and before long a drizzling rain began to fall, without, however, diminishing the crowd already in waiting outside the jail. The general suspension of business throughout the country in deference to the extraordinary event of the day, and funeral quiet attending the preparations for the executions, served to make more impressive the tragic occurrence which marked this most eventful calendar of the State. The previous night passed without incident, but soon after dawn the town became the rendezvous for groups of pedestrians from all parts of the neighboring country.

Meanwhile the immediate relatives of the condemned took their last farewell. soon at their devotions. The scene was a trying one. The brother and two sisters of Roarity were admitted at six, and soon after the aged and impoverished father of Munley, who had walked to prison all the way from Gilberton, a distance of thirteen miles.

The crowds of curious spectators increased from small groups of the early morning to thousands, and occupy the entire street. There were no indications of turbulence. The Coal and Iron Police, to the number of forty, armed with navy revolvers and Winchester rifles, took possession and were responsible for whilst a considerable number of detectives were relied upon to discover and give timely notice of any conspiracy or preparations were made so quietly that a stranger to them would not have suspected them.

The March to the Gallows

After several hours of patient waiting, the witnesses of the execution gradually closed up close to the outstretched rope extending from one end of the yard to the other, which barred intrusion upon the reversed space in front of the gallows The relatives and friends of several of the men were allowed to witness the dread spectacle. At 10:50 the creaking of the iron gate at the opposite side of the yard caused all eyes to be turned thither. Two minutes later the mournful procession appeared, and wended its way to the scaffold. Two of the condemned men, McGeehan and Boyle, were brought out accompanied by Sheriff Warner and Deputy Sheriff Snyder, and attended by clergymen. McGeehan with Father Mar-tin Walsh, of Hecksherville, came first and Boyle with Father Beresford, of Pt. Carbon. The remainder of the cortege consisted of the underkeeper of the pris-on, Moses Jones, and Drs. Salladay and

He appeared to realize his awful situation, and repeatedly looked appealingly to heaven. Both the men kissed the priests, and shook hands with the Sheriff. Boyle respond-ed to a remark of his attending priest with "I ain't a bit sorry."

Brief Speeches of McGeehan and Boyle. McGeehan, in response to an intimation that he was at liberty to say any-thing he desired, at once addressed the assemblage as follows:

GESTLEMEN-I have nothing at all to say to you about my guilt or innocence, nor about them that left me in here, or them that done anything else to me, only ask forgiveness of the whole world, if I have done a wrong to them, and that Almighty God may forgive all Christians, all them that he ever created in this world, for the sake of forgiving my sins

The speech was ended, its concluding portion having been delivered in a some-what tremulous, though firm and vigor-ous tone. Boyle now addressed the crowd without a symptom of emotion.

I have nothing to say gentlemen, only pretty much in the same way; nothing as regards guilt or innocence. I forgive those that put me here. I forgive them

McGeehan, with a supplicating look homeward, here supplemented his re-marks by fervently exclaiming: "I have done all in my power to save my soul; anything at all I could do I have done, and I trust in God. If there is any an on my soul I have not cleaned off, God was also born in Ireland, and was un-for the sake of him to forgive me my upward, muttering a prayer. The ropes married. With the conclusion of the speeches All this time the silence was painful. an awkward pause ensued, the officials not knowing whether to proceed immediately. The last good-byes, however, were some said, and the arms and legs of the men pinioned, both calmiy surveying the men particular and McGashan coast the preparations, and McGeehan occasionally murmuring a prayer and gazing intently heavenward. As the noose was being adjusted around his neck, he exclaimed, "Christ have mercy on me, Lord have mercy on me." The nooses were then adjusted, the trap sprung, and in a few moments the men were daugling between beaven and earth.

Execution of Rearity and Carroll.

At six minutes after twelve the Sheriff, his deputy, the prison keeper and prison physician reappeared at the gallows with James Roarity and James Carroll, who were attended by Revs. Gately, of Pottsville, and Beresford, each of the condemned men carrying a crucifix.

EXECUTIONS AT MAUCH CHUNK.

How Campbell, Boyle, BonAhue and Kelly Died Mauch Chunk, June 21 .- At dark last night Doyle and Campbell lit their canlles and proceeded with their religious duties. Kelly and Donahue did not light theirs at all, and prayed in the darkness. In the corridor the only sound audible was the prayers which came from the cells of the condemned men. At twelve o'clock Doyle and Campbell extinguished their lights and laid upon their cots. sound ceased in Kelly and Donahue's cells. At least one half hour before one o'clock the condemned men were all At four they all awoke and were asleep.

Shortly after daybreak, the citizens who had been patrolling the town with oaded rifles all night returned to their omes. Every bridle path in the neighporing mountains was patrolled all night At six o'clock General Betoletti, counsel for Kelly, bade him good by, Kelly thanked him for his legal efforts. Donahue said he had nothing to say to his counsel and said, "Get out of my cell" The other two men shook hands with the counsel. The stores in the city are all closed. At nine o'clock the Eastern Grays of the Fourteenth regiment, with thirty-five guns were stationed outside the jail.

The old man is almost in his dotage, and his arrival, with all his family (one of the sons prepared to lay out his brother's remains), was sickening to behold. Doyle's remains will be moved after his execution to Mt. Laffe, where the old man and the rest of the family reside,

The Four Mon on the Gallows.

All the arrangements were made for the execution at ten o'clock. Shortly after the deputy sheriffs, and reporters and other assistants entered the corridor. The scaffold, in the shape of a square, was erected in the center of of the jail corridor, with seats around it for the jury, deputies and reporters. The gallery for prominent citizens and visitors was also overflowing. About two hundred were inside. The scaffold was so arranged that one prisoner was placed on each corner, two facing each other.

The Sheriff adjusted the ropes and Layer Tremont, prison physicians. The called his assistants. Campbell "Have you anything to say?" Campbell was perfectly composed, and straighten-ing himself, looked upon the crowd in the corridor and said, in a loud voice: "I forgive every one. I have not an enemy in the world." His speech finished, he again kissed the crucifix and bowed his head. The Sheriff then turned to Doyle and asked if he had anything to say Doyle's voice was so weak that what he said was not audible a foot away from where the press reporters stood, and that was, "I forgive every one as Christ has forgiven me." He again kissed the cruciffx with head bent, and muttered his prayers. The Sheriff again motioned to the officers, and Jack Donaline was brought out. His face was very pale and he had wasted away consideral his confinement. He ascended the steps slowly, accompanied by his priest. He exhibited very little nervousness. Heat times kissed the crucifix which he carried in his hand and said his prayers in a loud tone.

A Thrilling Scene

The men were then all in the position in which they were to be hung. Camp bell and Donohue were standing side by side. Doyle and Kelly were standing together. They were all perfectly composed, and repeatedly kissing the crucifix. They showed no emotion, At this time there were four priests upon the scaffold and the sheriff and two officers. The priests and the condemned men made the responses of the prayers for them At 11:15 o'clock the priests descended from the scaffold and the hands of the men were handcuffed behind, and their legs pinioned. They stood quietly and perfectly calm. One of the priests said will make me suffer here now. I offer up this death that I have to die to God to Kelly: "Pray, Edward." He looked in rapidly on change.

The men did not even make their prayers audible, and but for the paleness of their faces it would not have been noticed that they felt their terrible situation in the least. The white caps were put over their heads, and scarcely had the officers descended from the scaffold

The Trap was Sprung with a Heavy Thud. The doors fell away, and the men dangled in the air. Kelly occasionally moved a muscle. Doyle must have died easily. Campbell did not move his legs or arms, but Donahue must have suffered considerably, as he kicked violently, drawing his knees up almost even with his body. After two or three struggles he was perfectly still, with the exception of a twitching movement noticed in his fingers. At the expiration of thirty-two minutes the physicians pro-The crowd looked to Carroll, who was nounced all dead, and they were lowered calm, and in appearance more intelligent and placed in coffins. EXECUTION AT WILKESBARBE.

Andrew Lanahan Hung for the Murder of John Rellly.

10:40 this morning Andrew Lanahan was hanged in the yard of the county prison at this place, for the murder of Captain John Reilly, which took place in the fall of 1874. Both were Irishmen; but Reilly was an old resident of this city, a Justice of the Peace, and a former commander of a local military organization. Lanahan was a tall, rough fellow, with a bad reputation. He met Reilly just at dusk in a saloon under the building in which a Democratic convention was held. He had a horse and carriage outside, and after seeing Reilly invited him to ride home with him, Reilly accepted, and when the two were driving down one of the prominent streets in this city, and when they had got not more than five hundred yards from the saloon Lanahan drew a revolver and shot Reilly through the heart, killing him instantly. The murderer then hastily partially covered the body with a blanket and drove furiously towards the suburbs. When crossing a bridge Lanahan's vehicle collided with another coming from an opposite direction, and Reilly's body slipped out and fell to the ground. Lanahan at once leaped out of his carriage and fled Reilly's body was taken in charge by those in the other carriage and brought to Wilkesbarre. Great excitement followed, and many stories were set affoat concerning the motive of the murderer. It was generally supposed to be instiga-ted by the Mollie Maguires, but nothing definite was ever discovered as to what induced the killing. Lanahan was shielded by many friends here, who spirited him off to Illinois, where he remained for one year. He was at last detected by the coal-and-iron police, and returned to this city. His trial folowed in 1875, and he was found guilty In the early part of 1876 he was sentenced to be hanged. Delay was made however, on a writ of error, but in the end everything resulted disastrously He died attended by faithful priests and apparently repentant, He was firm
